

THIS MONTH'S #1

The Mothers: A Novel

By Brit Bennett

(Riverhead, 9780399184512, $26)

"The 'mothers' of this book's title refers to the gaggle of elderly churchgoing women who comment on the congregation around them, especially the trio of Nadia, Luke, and Aubrey. But The Mothers is about more than that—it refers to the concept of motherhood, whether biological, lost, aborted, adoptive, or conflicted. The three young people at the heart of this story are all flawed, but their portrayals are realistic and they are easy for readers to support. This is a book about salvation—not the spiritual salvation that the gossiping, but well-intentioned mothers seek, but the kind that comes with self-acceptance and growth. The Mothers is an honest, modern, and triumphant book."

—Jamie Thomas, Women & Children First, Chicago, IL

Revisit & Rediscover

Take a fresh look at these old favorites.

Let Us Now Praise Famous Men

By James Agee and Walker Evans
(Mariner Books, 9780618127498, $18.95)
Originally published in hardcover in 1941
"A distinctly American classic, Let Us Now Praise Famous Men grew out of an assignment for Fortune magazine for a piece on the dire poverty of sharecroppers during the Depression. Writer James Agee and photographer Walker Evans created an enduring testament to human dignity as well as an experimental approach to journalism and narrative nonfiction. This book continues to influence the forms of photojournalism, documentary, and reportage, and is a strikingly articulate work of social conscience and self-reflection."

—John Evans, DIESEL: A Bookstore, Santa Monica, CA

The Map of Love: A Novel

By Ahdaf Soueif
(Anchor, 9780385720113, $16)
Originally published in hardcover in 1999

"Egypt comes alive in Soueif's sweeping novel of two women whose lives intersect as they research the journals and diaries of a shared ancestor. In a story alternating between the 1890s and the 1990s, readers discover generations of strong, curious women who, in the desire to find themselves, have chosen to explore an ancient culture. This is historical fiction at its very best, with echoes of the works of E.M. Forster and Michael Ondaatje's The English Patient in its portrayal of the seduction of a foreign land and romance—all-encompassing yet not without risk, both literal and metaphorical."

—Melanie Fleishman, Arcadia Books, Spring Green, WI

Silent Spring

By Rachel Carson
(Mariner Books, 9780618249060, $14.95)
Originally published in hardcover in 1962

"Originally serialized in The New Yorker in the summer of 1962, Carson's Silent Spring became an instant bestseller and formed the cornerstone of the nascent environmental movement, igniting a national debate on pesticides and a discussion of the relationship between humans and the environment. More than a half-century later, that discussion is still pertinent, as we debate the merits and costs of a multitude of scientific and technological 'advancements.' Silent Spring is a rare nonfiction classic that stands the test of time."

—Sally McPherson, Broadway Books, Portland, OR
